This the Speaker refused, insisting that if anything in that line was to be done there must be a general overhauling of the tariff.

As a final proposition the speaker suggested that the whole question be considered in caucus, and that the caucus action should be binding on all who might participate. The idea did not captivate Mr. Randall. He knew what the caucus would require of him. He was not obliged to drink the hemlock, and he declined to do it.

Something is rotten in Denmark. We have come to the conclusion that the paper takes a nap at the Charleston Prestoffice before it reaches its deatination. To prove my assertion on several occasions the mail pouches have been nearly destitute of any newspapers whatever. If this is Democratic reform we have got enough. We want our Republican papers, and we are going to have them.
